REPRESENTATION IN THE AGE OF POPULISM?

IDEAS FOR GLOBAL ACTION

OBJECTIVE OF THE CONFERENCE

Leaders from politics, society, academia, democracy support, and media from across the world gather to shape a Global Agenda for the Renewal of Representation, a guide aimed at reinvigorating the linkages between people and the diverse forms of representation they have. This Agenda will seek to inspire (i) social and political leaders from all regions of the globe, and (ii) the communities supporting their work.

VENUE

The Belgian Senate (entrance by Leuvenseweg 7 rue de Louvain, 1000 Brussels)

ORGANIZING PARTNERS

- International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance (International IDEA)
- Netherlands Institute for Multiparty Democracy (NIMD)
- OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR)
- Research Center for the Study of Parties and Democracy of the University of Nottingham and the University of Birmingham (REPRESENT)
- Westminster Foundation for Democracy (WFD)

MOTIVATION

The conference takes place against a backdrop of pressing questions on the fitness of the traditional linchpins of democratic representation, political parties and legislatures, to adequately represent people. In both established and developing democracies alike, irrespective of regions, the appeal of these institutions declines as new forms of political action and agendas grow in relevance. Among all, populism adopts different organizational forms, agendas and styles as it travels across regions. Distinct varieties of populism feature a range of disruptive ways of connecting, either through rhetoric or action, people and their grievances on the one hand, to the establishment on the other.

Does populism bear the potential demise or renewal of representative democracy? Our understanding of the specifics has been limited by the fact that populism cuts across both geographic, cultural and developmental boundaries. The implications of populism may vary across time and place; depending on whether democracies are old or young, consolidated or not, and on whether economies are affluent or developing.

Populism's disruptions to representative systems are wide ranging and include: the re-politicization of long-held consensus on areas such as welfare, economic management, or regional integration, or the reignition of longstanding grievances such as women's equality, thus redrawing lines of political contestation; the growth of participation outside party membership, as people search and try out alternative organizational vehicles for political influence, such as movements, protest and other new forms of political organizing; the challenges of polarization to compromise and coalition formation within legislatures; cultural and value changes in societies; the realignment of political allegiances within electorates, volatility and renewal of party systems; the transformation of public debates, as news coverage pushes new frontiers and meets ever-evolving forms of social media on digital platforms; the reshaping of the traditional deliberation and oversight roles by legislatures, and other democratic accountability measures; among others.

All these disruptions are difficult to navigate for social and political leaders, as much as they are for different communities of practice from the social sciences, democracy assistance, and the media. Part of the complexity to deal with populism is because of 'feedback' mechanisms at play: populism is in part a product of these changes, but it also reinforces them and drives them further. Conference participants will engage in a dialogue to reflect on past and current opportunities and challenges to representation, as they draw lessons to inspire future action for its renewal.

CONTRIBUTION TO THE RENEWAL OF REPRESENTATION

The conference offers an opportunity for a frank dialogue and knowledge sharing across disciplines, political creeds and geographical regions. We invite participants to propose elements for a Global Agenda for the Renewal of Representation. The agenda shall serve as guidance to leaders from politics and society, and the communities working to support them to reactivate the linkages between people on the one hand, and both old and new representation forms on the other. The agenda's focus is on tackling the changing nature of political representation through the identification of innovative actions.

A wide range of relevant voices from both traditional and recently established political parties and social movements from across the spectrum will engage alongside media, research, and democracy assistance organizations to propose actionable answers to pressing questions, including: Has the public become disconnected from traditional parties and legislatures, or are people simply connecting to them in different ways? Is this the end of parties? What are the implications for established democracies and those countries on the brink of or early moments of democratic transition? How can organizations that advance democracy by assisting political parties respond to the challenges of populism and new modes of political participation? What role has technology and social media played in fostering populism, and what role might they play in the renewal of representation?

Conference participants are invited to inspire new thinking with an eye towards embracing the opportunities created by populism while confronting its challenges. By facilitating greater convergence between populism research and action, we hope to affect the lives of millions of citizens around the world. These benefits will flow to the citizens of both old and new democracies, including – but not limited to – those who are direct beneficiaries of the EUR 8bn spent on democracy assistance each year.

STRUCTURE OF THE CONFERENCE

The conference follows a progressive sequence starting with reflections on the past and present of representation and culminating in forward-looking discussions on actions to renew representation. The conference is thus organized into three clusters. The first cluster intends to build an understanding of populism, its drivers and the opportunities and challenges it poses. The second cluster deals with the implications of these challenges for the future of the two traditional linchpins of representation: political parties and legislatures. The final cluster is forward-looking, as it is geared towards developing an agenda to inspire the action of current and future leaders in politics and society, and the organizations who work in their support.

Each cluster consists of two lightning talks, one panel discussion—both held in plenaries—and a minimum of four parallel working sessions. Lightning talks shall present a position on the proposed theme and set the stage for the ensuing panel discussions and working sessions. Panel discussions will provide space for debate and general reflection on the overarching cluster topics. The working sessions will allow for more focused discussions.

THE GLOBAL AGENDA FOR THE RENEWAL OF REPRESENTATION

The organizers will nominate conference rapporteurs to take on the formulation of the Global Agenda for the Renewal of Representation. Their work will be based on the conference proceedings, reflecting the diversity of political views, disciplines and fields of work.

The Global Agenda for the Renewal of Representation shall be circulated among participants willing to consider their endorsements after the conference. Following a period for endorsements, the Global Agenda will be published online and in print. The online version will remain open for further endorsements by interested organizations and individuals.

Conference and working session rapporteurs will elaborate two complementary products:

- A report of the conference proceedings, which will be offered for publication to relevant academic or media outlets.
- A short synthesis of the Global Agenda in the form of an op-ed will be offered for publication to a pool of leading news media outlets in different languages and from all participating regions.

Room: Hemicycle
- 09:55–10:30 Lightning talks: UNDERSTANDING POPULISM AND ITS DRIVERS
This introductory session sets the stage for discussions. It provides an overview of different understandings of populism today, and the variety of forms it has adopted at different historical periods and regions.
Cas Mudde, Associate Professor in the School of Public and International Affairs at the University of Georgia; Researcher in the Center for Research on Extremism at the University of Oslo)
Chantal Delsol, Philosopher, Founder of the Hannah Arendt Research Institute, author of Populisme: Les demeures de l'Histoire, Le Figaro columnist
- 10.30–11.30 Panel Discussion: IS POPULISM A THREAT OR AN OPPORTUNITY?
In light of the historical and contextual factors driving populism, this session explores whether the increase in populism represents an opportunity or a threat to representation. The panel discussion will examine the growing relevance of populist forms of political leadership and mobilization, and how the phenomenon has unfolded across regions.

 Room: Hemicycle
- 14:15–14:45 Lightning talks: ADAPTATION TO THE EVOLVING NATURE OF REPRESENTATION
 This session addresses one of the most pressing questions of our time: How will political parties and legislatures have to transform to remain relevant? How have new political movements succeeded in adapting to the changing face of representation?
- Katalin Cseh, Vice-President, Momentum Movement, Hungary
Kizza Besigye, Opposition leader, Uganda
- 14:45–15:45 Panel Discussion: THE CHANGING FACE OF REPRESENTATION, VISIONS FROM THE REGIONS
 The panel addresses how politics has transformed, bringing new actors and methods to the table. The panellists will debate about the changing face of representation from their political experience, and answer some of the following questions: what does political leadership landscape in different parts of the world currently look like, and how will the ‘face of representation’ change (e.g. thanks or due to populist movements)? Can we expect more or fewer female leaders/faces in politics in different regions of the world? Does populism open or rather further close doors for traditionally excluded or marginalized groups in society? How (often) do leaderless movements change the traditional notion of a chosen/elected leader? Who will be representing ‘the people’ in the future, and at what level?
- Lin Fei-fan, Sunflower Movement, Taiwan
Gordana Comic, MP and Deputy Speaker of Serbian Parliament
Nicholas Westcott, Director, Royal African Society

LEARNING FROM HISTORY: PAST EXPERIENCES OF POPULISM AND ITS DRIVERS (ROOM D)

CONVENER	Westminster Foundation for Democracy
CLUSTER	Understanding populism and its drivers
DESCRIPTION	With so much attention focusing on the emergence of populist movements in Europe and the US in recent years, it is instructive to reflect on populist experiences from elsewhere in the world and examine carefully their histories. This can cast light on the trajectories these populist trends are likeliest to take and how political systems in the past have responded to the threat they posed. The panel will look at experiences from the Balkans, the Middle East and North Africa, and Latin America to get a global picture of how populism has manifested in the past. AGENDA <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Opening statement by the moderator. • Presentations by speakers. • Roundtable debate, led by the moderator. Interaction with the audience.

NEIGHBOURHOOD EFFECTS? ASSESSING THE IMPACT OF POPULIST TRENDS IN EUROPE/US ON THE POLITICS OF OTHER REGIONS (ROOM K)

CONVENER	Westminster Foundation for Democracy
CLUSTER	Understanding populism and its drivers
DESCRIPTION	The recent populist trend in Europe and the US have been extensively studied and analyzed with respect to what it portends for the future of Western liberal democracy and its institutions. Significantly less attention has been given the impact of these populist movements on the political systems of neighboring regions. Has the rise of populism opened the door to increased Russian influence throughout Eastern Europe and the Middle East? If the populist trend continues, will it further erode confidence in democracy in countries still undergoing transition? This panel will look at current evidence from the EU neighborhood to understand how European populism may have implications beyond the borders of Europe. AGENDA <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Opening statement by the moderator. • Presentations by speakers. • Roundtable debate, led by the moderator. Interaction with the audience

SESSION 1.3 FROM EVIDENCE TO ACTION: USING RESEARCH TO TRANSFORM POPULISM FROM THREAT TO OPPORTUNITY (ROOM B)
CONVENER	REPRESENT – the Research Centre for the Study of Parties and Democracy
CLUSTER	Understanding populism and its drivers
DESCRIPTION	Populism is commonly presented as both a global phenomenon and an existential threat to representative democracy. This session will explore how academic research can help to transform populism from a threat into an opportunity by providing more nuanced, context-sensitive understandings of this phenomenon. Speakers will draw on new research, including research showcased at REPRESENT's recent conference—Political Parties in the Age of Populism—to identify concrete actions that can contribute to the renewal of political institutions. KEY QUESTIONS/THEMES <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Regional varieties of populism: Populism is a global phenomenon but one with distinct regional drivers and manifestations. What does this variation mean for responses to populism? • Which facets of populism represent potential opportunities? • How will the practice of democracy support need to change to realize opportunities create by populism and contribute more effectively to the renewal of representative democracy? AGENDA <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Opening statement by the moderator. • Presentations by speakers. • Roundtable debate, led by the moderator.

SOCIAL MEDIA MATTER: THE ROLE OF INFORMATION INTEGRITY IN THE RISE OF POPULISM (ROOM M)

CONVENER	National Democratic Institute
CLUSTER	Understanding populism and its drivers
DESCRIPTION	This session will discuss how information integrity in public discourse and political systems is increasingly distorted by disinformation campaigns spread through automated accounts, trolls, or other forms of computational propaganda. It will focus particularly on developing responses across sectors, in collaboration with government, the private sector and civil society including through a new initiative known as the Design for Democracy Coalition. The Coalition is a multi-partisan, global coalition of key actors in the democracy community to better liaise and coordinate with tech companies and social media platforms on areas of shared concern. Speakers will discuss this initiative, and the role of various groups from political parties to tech companies to media organizations in countering computational propaganda, disinformation and other forms of negative speech. Responses to encourage greater information integrity include measures ranging from developing strong cybersecurity for parties and CSOs to election monitoring for disinformation and other forms of harmful speech online. The group will also consider ways that new regulations such as the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) and initiatives such as the proposed EU Code of Practice on Disinformation can play a positive role in encouraging the development of information integrity in democratic discourse, politics and societies around the world.

THE POWER AND LIMITS OF PROTEST: LESSONS FROM THE WOMEN'S MOVEMENT (ROOM D)

CONVENER	OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR)

CLUSTER	The evolving nature of representation
DESCRIPTION	Populist parties and politicians claim to represent the “people” against elites, but more importantly, they also claim that only they represent “the people” and the “people’s will”. But what populists take to be the people’s real will is derived from what they stipulate to be the real people—and not all citizens will automatically be part of that real people. With this notion, the populists deny the pluralism of contemporary societies. When they say equality, they seem to mean sameness.^[i] Very often, the programs of populist parties and movements consider the concept of gender equality to be detrimental to the family and society, as meant to destroy the ‘natural roles’ given to men and women and thus take concrete steps against gender equality and human rights. They create conditions for a strong anti-feminist bias, taking action to the detriment of already achieved rights, resulting in direct consequences to issues such as prevention of gender-based violence, education on gender equality, women’s political participation and the adoption of special temporary measures. Recent years have seen massive protests organized by the women’s movement against proposals to curtail women’s rights as well as human rights and the rule of law more widely. Examples such as the Women’s March in the US or the women’s strike in Spain and the Black Protest in Poland show how women are trying to effect change by standing up en masse to perceived injustice. What is the impact of such mass organization, what results have been achieved and what are the limits of protest? And on the other hand, what are the benefits of representation and participation in decision-making through more formal politics, as the recent rise of feminist parties, for example in the UK, Sweden and Finland, implies? What are the lessons learned and best practices for ensuring women’s representation, role, and influence in today’s politics? How do the more traditional mainstream political parties fit in this? AGENDA <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Opening statement by the moderator • Presentations by speakers • Roundtable debate, led by the moderator

MORE THAN ELECTIONS: POLITICIANS' ONGOING ACCOUNTABILITY TO CITIZENS (ROOM K)

CONVENER	Transparency International EU
CLUSTER	The evolving nature of representation
DESCRIPTION	The discourse on “corrupt elites” is a common theme of populist movements around the world. How to hold elected politicians to account is of course a key issue for any democracy, but public perception on the issue has evolved in recent years. Expressing discontent at the ballot box every few years is not long enough. Beyond the populist rhetoric, this session will explore various ways to hold elected officials to account beyond elections. Questions around ethics, conflicts of interest, lobbying transparency, and revolving doors will be discussed. The balance between the freedom of mandate in a representative democracy and ensuring that politicians respect ethics rules, but also the platform and mandate they were elected on, will be at the center of the debate.

CONVENER	Netherlands Institute for Multiparty Democracy (NIMD)
CLUSTER	The evolving nature of representation
DESCRIPTION	With a decline in party membership and a growing mistrust in political actors, many parties and politicians are proactively addressing this problem by creating new and innovative mechanisms to re-engage with the people. Some of these mechanisms are high-tech in nature, whereas others are a reinterpretation of traditional engagement structures. This session will bring together practical experiences and lessons from outside the EU that will assist the democracy assistance community in shaping new policy and actions. Experiences from Africa, the Eastern European Neighbourhood and Latin America are presented and compared to trends within the EU in order to distill best practices. AGENDA <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Opening statement by the moderator • Presentations by speakers • Roundtable debate, led by the moderator • Interaction with the audience

SESSION 2.4 COMMUNICATION TECHNOLOGY IN MODERN DEMOCRACY: (DIS)CONNECTING PUBLIC-POLITICAL DIALOGUE? (ROOM M)
CONVENER	International Republican Institute
CLUSTER	The evolving nature of representation
DESCRIPTION	The shift from personal political dialogues of consensus and compromise seeking to those of quick bursts of 280 characters or less in an exchange of online posts, epitomises the impact technology and communication platforms have on modern governments and political parties. As the internet-of-things and e-governance extend the reach of technology in our daily lives, it has become more susceptible to cyber-attacks, politically-motivated leaks, and disinformation raising questions about privacy and the fragility of our digital societies. This panel seeks to bring together voices from political parties, companies, and NGOs to discuss whether our initial understanding of technology as a force for strengthening democracies remains true today. How has technology shaped the modern political party and what it means to campaign? What risks do we face as political discourse has moved from lengthy party meetings and citizens-party dialogues to a level of instant short posts curbed by social bubbles? Is the libertarian nature of internet culture inherently more supportive of extreme forms of political populism? This panel seeks to discuss these topics as well as highlighting some of the key deficiencies and threats to democracy arising from technological advance.

SESSION 3.1 INNOVATION AND REPRESENTATION: ALTERNATIVE FORMS OF CITIZEN ENGAGEMENT IN POLITICS (ROOM D)
CONVENER	International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance (International IDEA)
CLUSTER	The future of political representation
DESCRIPTION	The conference thematic pillar “The Future of Political Representation” explores the potential opportunities and limitations of new modes of political representation and focuses on recommended actions for improving and innovating politics, especially from the perspective of inclusion and reducing inequalities. This working session will look more closely at new modes of citizen engagement, and will challenge participants to think about the future of representation in more practical terms, to discuss alternative paths for political action and learn about innovative mechanisms that engage citizens in politics. Whilst traditional political parties in many regions worry about membership decline and an increasing distance from citizens, citizen platforms and social (media) movements, often fueled by protest, seem to have gained ground and be the new political forces to be reckoned with. Could these innovations in representation and democracy practice make political parties and parliaments redundant? Can we have the best of both worlds? That is, can we develop innovative mechanisms that engage citizens in politics in a way that complements, improves and changes, rather than replaces, political parties and legislatures? AGENDA 11:00-11:30 Panelist introduction and statements 11:30-12:00 Moderated debate: What is the status quo, what are innovations, what’s the future? 12:00-12:30 Q&A with the audience
FORMAT	Panel discussion followed by a debate with the audience.

SESSION 3.2 THE FUTURE OF POPULISM: IS ‘FIXING’ POPULISM BY CHANGING THE RULES THE ANSWER? (ROOM K)
CONVENER	OSCE Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR)
CLUSTER	The future of political representation
DESCRIPTION	The rise of populist/anti-establishment movements or parties poses challenges to all sectors of society. Their appeal also presents the question how apt political party regulation is to respond to those parties. Populist parties illustrate the very dilemma of political party regulation; too much regulation will stifle political discourse and might further disenfranchise citizens who become frustrated by the obstacles they face when wanting participate in public discourse by way of engagement in political parties. Resting on the profusion of analysis available on this revamp of populism, the Working Session will look specifically at whether populist movements and political parties have specific characteristics and present challenges that require additional regulation, from their funding modalities to their political platforms.
FORMAT	Panel discussion with substantial Q&A session.
SPEAKERS	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Richard Katz, Member of the OSCE/ODIHR Group of Experts on Political Parties • Eka Gigauri, Transparency International Georgia • John Holmes, UK Electoral Commission

SESSION 3.3 NOW WHAT? RESPONDING TO POPULISM IN POLICY AND PRACTICE (ROOM B)
CONVENER	European Partnership for Democracy
CLUSTER	The future of political representation
DESCRIPTION	The workshop will answer the ‘now what’ question by building upon the lightning talks and panel discussion of cluster 3 to look ahead in terms of policy-making and practical steps to take in order to counter the negative political effects of populism. Following a presentation, the session will engage a range of practitioners, policy-makers and donors to seek to establish recommendations for counteracting populism and reinvigorating representative politics. The discussion should take into account what is realistic and actionable from the point of view of policy-makers and practitioners. Some example questions: What angles can be taken to address current challenges to representation? What have various donors done to promote pluralism? What responses have practitioners made to the rise of populist rhetoric? What are possible policy responses to the rise of populism? What role could new forms of communication play in this? This workshop forms part of a series of events convened by EPD over the course of 2018 and 2019 that will review European democracy support. AGENDA 11:00-11:05 Moderator introduction 11:05-11:20 Speaker 11:20-12:30 Discussion with participants
FORMAT	The session should take the form of a workshop, encouraging different members of the audience to contribute to the debate. It will be kicked off by a presentation.

SAVING DEMOCRACY FROM TECH, OR SAVING DEMOCRACY WITH TECH? (ROOM D)

CONVENER	National Democratic Institute International IDEA
CLUSTER	The future of political representation
DESCRIPTION	With the growing importance of technology in political campaigns and politics in general, a great deal of focus has been placed on the type of influence it can exert. The initial enthusiasm about the power of technology to act as a pro-democracy force, which arose after its anti-authoritarian use in the Arab Spring and in the 2009 Iran protests, was confronted with an increased use of technology by authoritarian regimes and anti-democratic elements within democracies. This counter effect has harnessed the same technology that pro-democratic forces have used to achieve an entirely different goal: supporting authoritarian and antidemocratic agendas. The panel will shed light upon the potential positive and negative effects of tech on democracy, and on strategies to diffuse its most negative effects while fostering and amplifying the positive ones.
FORMAT	Plenary presentations followed by open discussion with the public.
SPEAKERS	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Rachele Gilman, New Knowledge Foundation and Code for Democracy • Rebecan Rumbul, MySociety • Anika Geisel, Facebook • Anna Mazgal, Wikimedia Deutschland • Sam van der Staak, International IDEA
