‘REPRESENTATION IN THE AGE OF POPULISM?
– IDEAS FOR GLOBAL ACTION’
BRUSSELS | JUNE 18-20, 2018
AGENDA

Objective of the conference

Leaders from politics, society, academia, democracy support, and media from across the world gather to shape a Global Agenda for the Renewal of Representation, a guide aimed at reinvigorating the linkages between people and the diverse forms of representation they have. This Agenda will seek to inspire (i) social and political leaders from all regions of the globe, and (ii) the communities supporting their work.

Venue

Hemicycle of the Belgian Senate (Place de la Nation, 1000 Brussels)

Motivation

The conference takes place against a backdrop of new questions on the fitness of the traditional linchpins of democratic representation, political parties and legislatures, to adequately represent people. In both established and developing democracies alike, irrespective of regions, the appeal of these institutions declines as new forms of political action and agendas grow in relevance. Among all, populism adopts different organizational forms, agendas and styles as it travels across regions. Distinct varieties of populism feature a range of disruptive ways of connecting, either through rhetoric or action, people and their grievances on the one hand, to the establishment on the other.

Does populism bear the potential demise or renewal of representative democracy? Our understanding of the specifics has been limited by the fact that populism cuts across both geographic, cultural and developmental boundaries. The implications of populism may vary across time and place; depending on whether democracies are old or young, consolidated or not, and on whether economies are affluent or developing.

Populism’s disruptions to representative systems are wide ranging and include: the re-politicization of long-held consensus on areas such as welfare, economic management, or regional integration, or the reignition of longstanding grievances such as women’s equality, thus redrawing lines of political contestation; the growth of participation outside party membership, as people search and try out alternative organizational vehicles for political influence, such as movements, protest and other new forms of political organizing; the challenges of polarization to compromise and coalition formation within legislatures; cultural and value changes in societies; the realignment of political allegiances within electorates, volatility and renewal of party systems; the transformation of public debates, as news coverage pushes new frontiers and meets ever-evolving forms of social media on digital platforms; the reshaping of the traditional deliberation and oversight roles by legislatures, and other democratic accountability measures; among others.

All these disruptions are difficult to navigate for social and political leaders, as much as they are for different communities of practice from the social sciences, democracy assistance, or the media. Part of the complexity to deal with populism is because of ‘feedback’ mechanisms at play: populism is in part a product of these changes, but it also reinforces them and drives them further.

Contribution to the renewal of representation

The conference offers an opportunity for a frank dialogue and knowledge sharing across disciplines, political creeds and geographical regions. We invite participants to propose elements for a Global Agenda for the Renewal of Representation. The agenda shall serve as guidance to leaders from politics and society, and the communities working to support them to reactivate the linkages between people on the one hand, and both old and new representation forms on the other. The agenda’s focus is on tackling the changing nature of political representation through the identification of innovative actions.

A wide range of relevant voices from both traditional and new political parties and social movements from all sides, as well as media, research, and democracy assistance organizations will propose actionable answers to pressing questions that include: Has the public become disconnected from traditional parties and legislatures, or are people simply connecting to them in different ways? Is this the end of parties? What are the implications for established democracies and those countries on the brink of or early moments of democratic transition? How can organizations that advance democracy by assisting political parties respond to the challenges of populism and new modes of political participation? What role has technology and social media played in fostering populism, and what role might they play in the renewal of representation?

Conference participants are invited to inspire new thinking to embrace the opportunities created by populism and confront its challenges. By facilitating greater convergence between populism research and action, we hope to affect the lives of millions of citizens around the world. These benefits will flow to the citizens of both old and new democracies, including — but not limited to — those who are direct beneficiaries of the EUR 8bn spent on democracy assistance each year.

Structure of the conference
The conference follows a progressive sequence starting from reflections on the past and present of representation, to forward-looking discussions on actions to renew representation. The conference is thus organized into three clusters. The first cluster intends to build an understanding of populism, its drivers and the opportunities and challenges it poses. The second cluster deals with the implications of these challenges for the future of the two traditional linchpins of representation: political parties and legislatures. The final cluster is forward-looking, as it is geared towards developing an agenda to inspire the action of current and future leaders in politics and society, and the organizations who work in their support.

Each cluster consists of two lightning talks, one panel discussion - both held in plenaries - and four parallel working sessions. Lightning talks are 15-minute interventions with the purpose to present a position on the proposed theme and set the stage for the ensuing panel discussions and working sessions. Panel discussions will provide space for debate and general reflection on the overarching cluster topics. The working sessions will allow for more focused discussions on four thematic workstreams: (i) forms of participation and representation; (ii) drivers of populism; (iii) the future of political parties and legislatures; and (iv) media and information. Thus, participants shall be able to focus on up to three workstreams throughout the conference.

The Global Agenda for the Renewal of Representation
The organizers have nominated rapporteurs to take on the formulation of the Global Agenda for the Renewal of Representation. Their work will be strictly based on the conference proceedings, reflecting the diversity of political views, disciplines and fields of work rather than their own. At the conference, the rapporteurs shall present (i) a synthesis of the most relevant debates taking place in the conference; (ii) the most relevant conclusions; and (iii) the most relevant ideas for action. A plenary debate will follow.

The Global Agenda for the Renewal of Representation in full shall be circulated among participants willing to consider their endorsements within 30 days after the conference. Following a period for endorsements, the Global Agenda will be published online and in print. The online version will remain open for further endorsements by interested organizations and individuals.

Conference and working session rapporteurs will elaborate two complementary products:
- A report of the conference proceedings, which will be offered for publication to relevant academic or media outlets.
- A short synthesis of the Global Agenda in the form of an op-ed will be offered for publication to a pool of leading news media outlets in different languages and from all participating regions.

BRUSSELS | JUNE 18-20, 2018

Plenary 1: Global and Historical Perspectives on Populism
09:45 – 10:15  Lightning talks: Understanding Populism and its Drivers

This introductory session sets the stage for discussions. It provides an overview of different understandings of populism today, and the variety of forms it has adopted at different historical periods and regions.

Lightning talk 1: Cas Mudde (Populism academic expert, Georgia University)

Lightning talk 2: TBC

10.15 - 11.15  Panel Discussion: Is Populism a Threat or an Opportunity?

In light of the historical and contextual factors driving the populism, this session explores whether the increase in populism represents an opportunity or a threat to representation. The panel discussion will examine the growing relevance of populist forms of political leadership and mobilization, and how the phenomenon has unfold all over the world.

Panellist 1: TBC
Panellist 2: Dr Paikisothy Saravanamutto (Sri Lankan Civil Society Leader)
Panellist 3: Delia Ferreira (Head, Transparency International)

11.15 - 11.30  Pause

11.30 - 13.00  Parallel working sessions – Cluster 1

13.00-14.00  Lunch

Plenary 2: The changing face of representation
14.00-14.30  Lightning talks: Adaptation to the evolving nature of representation

This session addresses one of the most pressing questions of our time: How had, or would, political parties and legislatures have to transform to remain relevant? How have new political movements success in adapting to the changing face of representation?

Lightning talk 1: TBC

Lightning talk 2: Anna Orosz (Deputy Chair of the Momentum Movement, Hungary)
Panel Discussion: Visions from the regions. the changing face of representation

This session will examine how politics have transformed and how changes in the political landscape are bringing new actors and methods to the table. The panellist will debate about the changing face of representation from their political experience, and answer some of the following questions: what does political leadership landscape in different parts of the world currently look like, and how will the ‘face of representation’ change (e.g. thanks or due to populist movements)? Can we expect more or less female leaders/faces in politics in different regions of the world? Does populism open or rather further close doors for traditionally excluded or marginalized groups in society? How do (often) leaderless movements change the traditional notion of a chosen/elected leader? Who will be representing ‘the people’ in the future, and at what level?

Panellist 1: Kizza Besigye (Opposition leader, Uganda)
Panellist 2: Emilie-Louise Purdie (Scottish National Party)
Panellist 3: Nicolas Westcott (Royal African Society Director)

Day 3 (20 June 2018)

08:30 - 09:00 Arrival

Plenary 3: The Future of Political Representation

09.00 - 09.30 Lightning talks: The future of Political Representation

Leading figures from global networks, new parties and political movements will explore the potential and limitations of new modes of political representation. The focus here will be on recommended actions for improving and innovating political representation, especially from the perspective of inclusion and reducing inequalities.

Lightning talk 1 - Richard Youngs (Carnegie Endowment for International Peace)

Lightning talk 2: Maria Ressa (CEO and founder, Rappler). TBC
09:30-10:30  Panel discussion: Action for the Renewal of Political Representation – Visions from the regions

This forward looking panel will offer visions for the renewal of the linkages between political parties, legislatures, new modes of political organizing and people, as well as their influence and their implications for democracy. Leaders representing different political actors, and forms of citizen engagement from different regions will debate whether their efforts are called to provide additional channels of political participation or to replace existing ones.

Panellist 1: John Paul Mwirigi (Kenyan MP)

Panellist 2: Siegfried Muresan (MEP, speaker EEP)

Panellist 3: Svitlana Zalishchuk (Ukraine politician)

10:30 - 11.00  Pause

11.00 - 12.30  Parallel working sessions – Cluster

12:30 – 13:30  Lunch

Rapporteurs present a preliminary summary of plenary and working session proceedings, followed by closing remarks.

Speaker 1: Heidi Hautala (VP European Parliament)

Speaker 2: Michelle Bachelet (TBC)
