The empowerment and advancement of women

On the surface, 2010 may look like a good year for women in democratic political systems around the world. At the same time, headline-grabbing achievements of women attaining executive power mask a global reality of lack of representation of women in political life and the exclusion of women from democratic decision-making processes.

Politics and parties: without equality, far from parity

Posted: March 5, 2010

The new decade begins with the election of another woman president. Laura Chinchilla, candidate for the Partido Liberación Nacional, became chief executive of Costa Rica with 46.8 percent of the vote. In Chile, meanwhile, Michelle Bachelet is ending her term with an approval rating of 83 percent. Their stories are no longer mere anecdotes, but are charting a new course for women in Latin American politics.

Bolivian women ready for politics: parties still need to be prodded

Posted: February 23, 2010

International IDEA's Bolivia programme is working with a network of women's organizations to mainstream gender equality into all aspects of political life. One notable success was the Mujeres listas para las listas (Women Ready for the Ballot) campaign, launched by the Women's Coordinating Committee, which resulted in a legal provision for gender equality on party candidate lists. This measure contributed to an increase in the number of women elected to the Bolivian Senate from 3,7 % (after the 2005 elections) to 41% of senators in 2009.

The EU, gender and democracy building

Posted: February 15, 2010

The EU's policies and actions abroad automatically impact on the gender aspects of democracy building. This article summarizes the gender-related findings of the International IDEA project "Democracy in Development – global consultations on the EU's role in democracy building." Consultations revealed that partners perceived EU intentions on gender to be vague and unclear: the EU was seen to have had little impact in this area.
